Description

Opened in 1910 as the Pringle's Picture Palace, later called Goldsmith Picture House, it was one of the first cinemas to be built in Nottingham. By 1948 it had reopened as The Nottingham Playhouse which operated from the premises until 1963 when it relocated to the purpose built Playhouse at Wellington Circus. After the closure of the Playhouse the building became a carpet showroom and the façade was stripped of all ornamentation and windows. In the early 1990's the building was restored, to some extent, although much of the ornamentation was simplified or not recreated, such as the decorative spandrel panel above the pedimented window at the centre of the Goldsmith Street façade. It reopened as the Tivoli bar and restaurant. In the late 1990's it became a pub called the Fair and Firkin, then in the early 2000's it became known as The Horn in Hand, followed by Spanky Van Dykes in the late 2000's before changing to Albert's in circa 2018.
