Description

An example of a late-nineteenth century mission school, 1889 by J J Marlow. The architecture draws upon a typical style for a non-conformist chapel but with some rectangular windows included which are similar to Victorian school buildings. The building demonstrates the contribution of churches to education for working class children during the nineteenth century. This building pre-dates the current Baptist church on the site, and the two show the development and fashions of non-conformist architectural styles. IN BASFORD HISTORIC AREA ASSESSMENT
